JOHN 6:1-15

Jesus took the five loaves and gave thanks. So should we when we eat. In a world in which millions are hungry, we shouldn't take food for granted.

Every loaf is as much a miracle as those Jesus gave to the people. Every loaf is touched by many human hands and by the hand of God. This is expressed beautifully in the prayer which the priest says over the bread at the Offertory of the Mass: 'Blessed are you, Lord, God of all creation. Through your goodness we have this bread to offer, which earth has given and human hands have made. It will become for us the bread of life.'

God does the same miracle through the seasons and the harvest. In the corn fields he multiplies not loaves but grains, so that if we do our part there is enough for everyone. A single grain of wheat can produce as many as seventy grains.

Today there is a preoccupation with food, but it varies greatly from one part of the world to another. In the developed world, we have too much food. The main preoccupation of many people has become how to cut down on food with a view to reducing weight. But this leaves people preoccupied with themselves, which is the death of love. In the Third World however, the problem is how to get anything to eat at all.

The miracle of Jesus should make us thankful to God for the food we have, and careful not to waste it. It should also made us actively concerned about those who have none. It is said that there are over 700 million people in the world today who do not have enough to eat. One third of all African children are undernourished.

The problem of what to do with our surplus food is a profoundly disturbing one for Christians. One answer is to stockpile it. But surely the stockpiling of surplus food is as great a scandal as the stockpiling of nuclear weapons. Another answer is to reduce the amount that is produced. But this leads to the scandal of farmers being paid to leave good land idle. Most farmers are unhappy with this arrangement.

The miracle of the multiplication of the loaves is a miracle of generosity. We experience that generosity every time we sit down to eat and especially when we receive the Eucharist. The experience of generosity should result in an engorging of our hearts, and a desire to be generous towards those who are not as fortunate as ourselves.

Flor McCarthy, SDB.
